New Issue of the Visegrad Insight: The Rise and Fall of Middle Class

Published by: Res Publica Foundation

Publication date: September 2012

Topics: The second issue of Visegrad Insight "Rise and Fall of Middle Class" launches this September in print and on-line at www.visegradinsight.eu. In an attempt to portrait the middle class in Central Europe, renowned academics, writers and intellectuals from the region and beyond discuss its roots and possible scenarios for the future. Street protesters and bank executives, literary awards recipients and aspiring political representatives of the contemporary middle classes are all in focus. In this issue: Péter Nádas questions the links of middle class and democracy. The U.S.-based intelligence unit Stratfor reports on geopolitical outcomes of bank acquisition in the region. Rudolf Chmel examines the conditions of solidarity in times of crisis. Timothy Garton Ash discusses the horizons of European imagination. Plus an extensive coverage on the relations with the USA and China, Central European book awards overview and much more.

Conferences

The mobile interface and social change. Embodied spaces and locative technologies

Date: December 5-6, 2012

Site: Rome, Italy

Organiser: "Sapienza", University of Rome

Topics: The aim of this 2-days Conference is to highlight, by the body, the emerging methodologies and applications in the study of mobile media time-space and with particular attention to: understand locative media in terms of embodied experience; draw the context in which methods are used as well as the tacit assumptions that shape research questions; focus on case studies illustrating how individuals, groups, and institutions have used mobile media to toy with or alter their physical surroundings. The organisers want to explore how, in everyday life, a number of dimensions of time and space are being newly reconstructed through the use of mobile communications technologies. The conference should be a starting point of long-term grounded research on the Socio-Technical Shaping of Mobile Multimedia Communications. The conference will offer a review and critique of some of the major sociological approaches to understanding time and space. This review entails a discussion of how social practices and institutions are maintained and/or transformed via mobile technologies. Ethnographic data will be used to explore emerging mobile temporalities. Three inter-connected domains in mobile time are proposed: 1. rhythms of mobile use; 2. rhythms of mobile use in everyday life; 3. rhythms of mobility and institutional change (discourses, representations, schemas). Each entails a relational ontology of the constitution of social actors, spaces and meanings. Theoretical as well as empirical presentations are welcome, especially work relating to micro-interactional research on the sociology of embodiment. Specifically, papers, power point presentations, and work in progress are invited on the following topics: Embodied Spaces and Locative Technologies; The Sensory

Inscribed Body; Mobility Capital and Performed Movement-Space; Synchronous and Asynchronous Maps of the Mobile Interface; The Rhythms of Mobile Use; The Rhythms of Mobile Use in Everyday Life; The Rhythms of Mobility and Institutional Change; The Contours of Contemporary Media and Culture.

International Conference on Development-Induced Displacement and Resettlement: Bridging Research and Practice, Filling the Knowledge Gaps

Date: March 22-23, 2013

Site: Oxford, UK

Organiser: Oxford University

Topics: International Conference on Development-induced Displacement and Resettlement aims to revive the discussions on DIDR and to facilitate critical engagement with the current impasse. It will facilitate cross-communication between different stakeholders, disciplines and perspectives; and will seek to bridge research and practice with a view to fill the knowledge gaps and move the DIDR studies forward. The conference invites papers that will contribute to reviving the discussions on development-induced displacement and resettlement. In view of the conference theme, "bridging research and practice, filling the knowledge gaps", papers facilitating cross-communications between different stakeholders, disciplines and perspectives are very much welcome. As a forum for critical reflections on the current practice and policies, the conference encourages presenters to engage in discussions on the least studied aspects and unanswered questions of DIDR. How much is enough to compensate an oustee for example, or what is a successful resettlement? How do we define the affected populations in the urban? How can we "re"settle mobile populations that are not settled in the first place? Should the affected people have the right to veto the projects?

International conference Transnational Spaces and Gender

Date: April 4-5, 2013

Site: Paderborn, Germany

Organiser: Institute for Human Sciences, Sociology

Topics: The conference moves beyond previous research approaches and examines the implications of social transformation processes not only for the field of principles, norms, institutions, practices and symbolic representations but also for the research areas of work and organisation, where the gendered division of work, relations of dependency and social and symbolic processes of exchange are questioned. The transnational perspective that is increasingly expanding into gender research additionally demands theoretical, methodological and methodical reflexions. The interactions between transnational networking and (trans)local gender arrangements need to be explored from an intersectional perspective, i.e. concerning their interconnection with other categories and inequalities, such as ethnicity, class and sexual orientation. The following questions should be guiding the conference: To what extent is the emergence of transnational spaces at the economic and political level related to gender arrangements at the national and regional level?; How are gender orders reproduced, modified or even dissolved by everyday transnational interactions between men and women?; How can the category of gender be systematically integrated (theoretically, methodologically and methodically) into the analysis of transnational processes? The conference focuses on three thematic priorities within which these questions should be investigated. These are: The field of norms, normalisation and identities; The field of work and organisations; The field of knowledge and knowledge production.

4th International Conference: "Researching Families and Relationships: innovations in methods, theory and policy"

Date: June 10-12, 2013

Site: Edinburgh, UK

Organiser: Centre for research on families and relationships (CRFR)

Topics: The conference will explore ways in which research on and with children, families and relationships have been developed in new and innovative ways in recent years. Themes could include: How have researchers met difficult theoretical, substantive or ethical challenges? How have methods been taken forward in the digital age and in the context of unequal access to resources across the globe? How have participatory, sensory and visual methods been developed? What have we learned from new approaches to the challenges of time and the life course? Where are the key innovations in understanding transnational families and relationships, international comparison and addressing minority (rich, high carbon footprint) and majority (poor, low carbon footprint) worlds? How can we address issues of inequalities, especially where these intersect? How are researchers analysing the part played by families and relationships in big 'global' issues such as climate change?

1st Global Conference : "Opportunity in Crisis: Finding Benefits in Difficult Life Events"

Date: February 7-9, 2013

Site: Sydney, Australia

Organiser: Inter-Disciplinary.Net

Topics: The conference is part of the Persons programme of research projects. It aims to bring together people from different areas and interests to share ideas and explore various discussions which are innovative and exciting. Participants in this project are encouraged to explore the notion that crises can provide opportunities for significant growth in areas of organisational management and planning, professional development and education, as well as those situations that influence psychological and spiritual well-being. In addition, this project invites a critical examination of those approaches, roles, skills, and conditions of relationship that make agency possible, establish collaboration, and assist in mutually helpful outcomes. Consequently, the organisers warmly invite professional practitioners, educators, planners, theoreticians, artists, and writers to present and reflect upon their work in this key area of emerging research and practice. Presentations, performances, papers, art-pieces, workshops, and pre-formed panels are invited on any of the following themes: The roles of crisis and opportunity in human development and across the life-span; The development of crisis theory; Case studies in crisis management and organisational change – examining and balancing proactive and reactive strategies; Critical issues in the management of crisis; The relationship between crisis and opportunities – crises that create opportunities, and opportunities that precipitate crises; Cultural perceptions of crisis and opportunity; Representations of crisis and opportunity in literature, the arts and in the media; Crisis, opportunity and psycho-spiritual development; Philosophical, ethical, and legal issues in crisis and opportunity; Learning from global crises and opportunities.

5th Central and Eastern European Forum for Young Legal, Political and Social Theorists

Date: May 3-4, 2013

Site: Greifswald; Germany

Organiser: Department of Political and Communication Science, University of Greifswald

Topics: The CEE Forum is a platform for young legal, political and social theorists who come from, currently study or work in Central and Eastern Europe or have a research interest in the region. The regional boundaries are understood widely. The target audiences of the conference are young researchers, especially doctoral students and post-docs, without a specific age limit. As in the previous Forums, the conference will be organised in three concurrent panels and will put its special emphasis on two major general topics. 1) Separation of Powers & Constitutional Review. Two core elements of modern constitutional democracies: separation of powers and constitutional review will be discussed in the first panel. These ideas are of enduring timeliness in legal and political theory. The organisers especially welcome submissions to answer the following questions: Is the separation of powers still applicable to the complexity of modern polities or is it of mere historical importance? How is this principle realised in the governmental system of the European Union? What is the exact meaning of the term separation and its manifold synonyms and alternatives? What is the "nature" of constitutional review: Is it jurisdiction, politics in the cloak of the law, something in between or even something totally different? What are the borders of constitutional review? How does the relationship between separation of powers and constitutional review look like: What is (or should be) the place of constitutional review in a power-separating order? Is it a part or the top of the judiciary or an own branch? 2) Constitutional Rights & Obligations. The second panel is dedicated to constitutional rights and obligations. Most modern constitutions provide basic rights and freedoms for individuals and/or groups in order to protect them against encroachments by the state. Additionally, there is some general consent in constitutional theory, which fundamental rights a constitution should at least guarantee. In contrast, obligations are much rarer in the constitutional landscape. Even basic necessities like tax paying are often not elevated to constitutional status. The following questions will be discussed: Should constitutions incorporate obligations or do obligations systematically violate the basic principles of liberal and democratic policies? How are constitutional obligations related to constitutional rights – both normatively and empirically? In particular, how do obligations influence liberty rights? Finally, which perspective do concurrent theories of democracy take on constitutional obligations, for instance on the idea of compulsory voting? 3) Open Panel. In order to meet the diverse interests of the Forum's participants from different disciplines, the third panel will be open to all interesting topics from the vast area of legal, political and social theory.

Date: September 12-14, 2013

Site: Bucharest, Romania

Organiser: SNSPA (Bucharest National School of Political Studies), Department of Political Science, in collaboration with the Median Research Centre-MRC, Bucharest

Topics: The following questions, as well as other important questions that fit the workshop, will be addressed at the Conference: How do European Unions approach the new social risks? What is the extent of the labour market fragmentation in EU? Do the political conflicts, concerning the welfare state, institutional and economic reforms, involve trade unions and firms? In what degree have European trade unions been affected by the economic crisis? Did the East and Central European countries produce labour relations' models different from other EU countries? How do we measure the new developments in labour relations? IREC 2013 welcomes theoretical and empirical paper proposals that offer analyses of the stances of social actors concerning the economic decisions in the EU, the interaction at the national level, between unions, firms, government and political parties, as well as on the various models of European tackling of mobility and flexibility of labour markets, the relations between union and employers membership, leadership, the values attitudes and interests of individuals, last but not least, the analysis of East Central European models of labour relations and capitalist development.

Studies of Transition States and Societies

Place of publication: Tallinn, Estonia

Type of publication: online

Publication date: Spring 2013

Published by/ edited by: Tallinn University Institute of Political Science and Governance and Tallinn University Institute of International and Social Studies

Topics: "Studies of Transition States and Societies" (STSS) aims to promote interdisciplinary exchange between scholars in all major subfields of sociology and political science. The substantive focus of the journal is on the transitional societies, particularly on the societal and political changes in postcommunist countries. Conceptually speaking, this journal seeks to challenge the teleological understanding of transition processes that is based on dichotomous classifications (traditions vs. modernism, democracy vs. totalitarianism, nation-states vs. multiculturalism, etc.), placing emphasis instead on holistic approaches and gradational units of analysis. The editors are now looking for articles to be published in their Spring issue (2013). The editors would be happy to receive articles from a wide range of disciplines but would give preferences to empirically based case studies from the former socialist region (spanning from Eastern Europe to China) focusing on civil society as an instrument of social and political transformation.

Type of publication: online

Publication date: December 2012 (Second issue; ISSN 2225-2215)

Edited by: Olga Guzhva, Dr. Mikhail Beznosov, Dr. Roman Sheiko

Topics: The goal of SCS Journal is to contribute to the understanding of current and historical trends of social change in contemporary world. The articles will deal with questions related to the political, economic, social, legal, and cultural changes and policies aimed to facilitation of prevention of those changes, and the relationship between various social institutions and society. The journal's goal is to foster debate on the many aspects of social changes that are of interest to policy-makers, administrators and journalists, international organizations personnel, as well as to students and college professors, social scientists and different sub-fields professionals (academics and researchers), PhD students, and administrators practitioners.

Journal of Social Science Education (JSSE): Post-Communist Citizenship

Place of publication: Bielefeld, Germany

Type of publication: online

Publication date: 2013 (Volume 12, Number 4, © JSSE 2013, ISSN 1618-5293)

Published by/ edited by: Bielefeld University, Faculty of Sociology

Topics: The Journal of Social Science Education will publish a special issue „Post-Communist Citizenship“ in 2013. It will reflect on dynamics in practices of citizenship across post-communist states with particular focus on countries which have experienced considerable institutional changes as a result of state building. The editors are specifically interested in comparative studies of societies that saw practices of citizenship changing since early 1990s as a result of border changes (including territorial adjustment and dissolution of socialist federations), population dynamics (both demographic, as a result of in and out migration, and resettlement after warfare) and amendments to their citizenship regimes (issuing passports to an ethnic kin folk and provisions for extraterritorial citizenship). Selection of key issues to be discussed: Conceptual and theoretical changes of focus in understanding the post-communist citizenship; Institutional/legal developments of citizenship in the post-communist countries with a focus on controversies; The role of transformation processes for the citizenship practices in those countries; Practices of citizenship and social coherence in the countries in question; Citizenship and civic education (the role of the education system vis-à-vis citizenship); Post-communist citizenship and nationalism (Is there a ‘crisis of the hyphen’ in post-communist countries?); Power and citizenship in the post-communist countries (the role of inequality and class stratification); The impact of external actors such as the Russian Federation, the U.S. or the EU on the citizenship practices in post-communist countries.

Publication date: 2014 (Issue number 5)

Edited by: Isabelle Jonveaux (University of Graz), Enzo Pace (University of Padua) and Stefania Palmisano (University of Turin)

Topics: With the aim of collecting articles by the leading sociologists at present doing fieldwork research on monasticism, the editors are seeking contributions which offer an overview of work-in-progress in this area. The objective is to publicize a little-known field of the sociology of religion and to provide it with new legitimacy. Possible topics include: Varieties of monasticism; Monasticism and economics; New forms of monasticism; Monasticism and vocations (recruiting); Monastic novitiates; New monastic foundations in so-called developing countries; Extra-European Christian monasticism; Social/religious role of monasticism; Monasticism and religious hierarchy.

Deadline: October 15, 2012

Social Media, Politics and the State 2013: Edited Collection: Social Media, Politics and the State: Protests, Revolutions, Riots, Crime, and Policing in the Age

Type of publication: print/ or online

Published by/ edited by: Daniel Trottier and Christian Fuchs

Topics: The focus of this collected volume is to seek contributions that give a realistic assessment of the relationship between various forms of collective action (e.g. the Arab spring, the Occupy movement, contemporary student protests, contemporary social movements in Greece, Spain, and other countries, Anonymous, WikiLeaks, various forms of terrorism, various forms of crime, various forms of political activism, etc.) and state power (the police, various political regimes, intelligence, the state-industrial surveillance complex, the neoliberal regime of governance, etc.) on social media. The editors are explicitly neither interested in contributions that tell readers which great opportunities or threats various forms of collective action on social media pose, nor in contributions that focus on opportunities or threats posed by various forms of state action on social media. They are rather exclusively interested in contributions that address how collective action and state power are related and conflict as two-sides of social media power, and how power and counter-power are distributed in this relationship. The editors are compiling a collection of research papers that address one or more of the following issues: Social media and the Arab Spring, and related regime conflicts; Social media and the Occupy movement; Social media and student protests / austerity protests; Social media and riots / social unrest in urban areas; Social media and political protests and activism; Social media and marginal political groups; Social media, right-wing extremism, and fascism; Social media and religious violence; Social media and organized crime; Social media and policing; Social media and police violence; Social media and the state-industrial surveillance complex; Social media and Anonymous; Social media and WikiLeaks.

Deadline: October 15, 2012; Abstracts should be sent to: daniel.trottier@im.uu.se

Reagan-Fascell Democracy Fellows Program

Institution/Organiser: National Endowment for Democracy (NED)

Kind of support/work: fellowship

Duration: Spring 2014 Session: March 1 to July 31, 2014

Site: Washington, US

Topics: The Reagan-Fascell Democracy Fellows Program is an international exchange program that offers practitioners, scholars, and journalists from around the world the opportunity to spend five months at the National Endowment for Democracy (NED), in Washington DC, in order to undertake independent research on democratic challenges worldwide. The program runs two five-month fellowship sessions per year, during which fellows are expected to work full time on their projects. Practitioners focus on strategies and best practices for strengthening democracy in their country of interest; scholars conduct original research for publication. Projects may address the economic, political, social, legal, or cultural aspects of democratic development and include a range of methodologies and approaches. The program hosts an active calendar of events, including an introduction to NED and its partner institutions. Fellows are expected to present their work and prepare a written product during their stay.

Eligibility: The fellowship is intended primarily for individuals from developing and aspiring democracies. Distinguished scholars from the United States and other established democracies are eligible to apply. Practitioners and journalists should have substantial work experience in their fields, while scholars are expected to have a Ph.D., or academic equivalent, at the time of application. The program does not support professional training, fieldwork, or students working toward a degree, nor does it provide funding to implement projects in the field. A working knowledge of English is required for participation in the program.

Deadline: October 15, 2012
